What the secret service man says about the radical labor agitators of America

By THOMAS DREIER

are you leaving your employees to this — ?

THERE came into our office not long ago a man who said he was a United States secret service operative.

Taking a large envelope nearly filled with clippings from his pocket, he drew out one, held it up, and asked, "Did you write that?" We said "Yes." Then he asked, "Did you write all these?" showing other clippings from articles dealing with the labor situation. "Yes," was our reply a second time.

"Well," he explained, "I came in to give you some more information. I have not only attended the meetings of the irresponsible agitators and listened to their speeches, but I have read their literature in several languages, know the workings of their organizations, and I want to tell you that the danger is greater than you, for all your warnings, can possibly realize unless you too have been in this work."

For an hour this man talked of what he had heard at these meetings. He told about secret circulars—circulars bearing no printer's mark to show where the work had been done. He talked about the organization.

"But," we exclaimed, "it takes money to print papers and circulars and maintain an organization! Where does the money come from?"

"Attend some of the meetings and you'll learn where the money comes from. The leaders have all the money they need. When they make an appeal for funds men empty their pockets. Some subscribe a week's wages. Others offer weekly sums for long periods. They are willing to pay the price because they feel sure that for the investment of a little money now they will get control of all the wealth—all the property, all the land, all the money, all the jewels of those who possess those things now."

He explained how a representative of the radical labor agitators enters a manufacturing plant as a workman. He talks to the man at the next machine. Soon there are two agitators in that plant. After a while there are many.

The radical labor agitator ideas have penetrated into the Army. "If the folks who say 'There can be no trouble from these agitators in this country for we have the soldiers' knew the truth, they would not be so sure."

There is part of the dark picture. We can pretend that there is no danger—the foolish thing to do. Or we can fight radical labor agitators' propaganda with American propaganda.

How we can fight and defeat radical agitation

We can fight the ideas of the irresponsible agitators, who camouflage themselves under the names of various kinds of organizations, by giving publicity to the ideas of Americanism.

Our job is to sell America to all persons who live in our country.

We must fight the radical labor agitator ideas, not by wholesale arrests, suppression of speech and print, but by a constructive campaign of counter-propaganda.

America stands for democracy—for equal opportunities for all men—for the development and exercise of initiative—for all those things that have for generations attracted the oppressed of other nations.

Yet, at the time you are reading this, your workers may be attending meetings, marching in parades, reading literature put forth by these radical labor agitators, or some of them may even be making speeches against you and the ideas that to you are sacred.

What are you doing to offset this enemy propaganda?

Have you invited American propaganda speakers to address your workers regularly? Have you urged them to attend meetings addressed by socially enlightened, but sane speakers whose Americanism is beyond doubt?

Are you publishing a weekly or monthly house organ through which your workers can learn directly what your ideas and ideals are, what you are doing or planning to do for them in the way of better working conditions, better housing, a greater share in the earnings and in the management, and other constructive, confidence-creating things of that kind?

Are you meeting enemy propaganda by means of patriotic posters? Pay envelope enclosures? Motion pictures? Educational classes? Americanization meetings?

Every business man—banker, manufacturer, retailer—every person who has any position of trust and responsibility should consider it a duty to himself, to his business, to his family, to his country to see that this American propaganda is released and circulated in every city and town and hamlet in the United States.

If you are already doing some part of this propaganda work or none at all let THE THOMAS DREIER SERVICE help you in carrying through a complete plan.

We are specialists in this kind of special service—inspirational publicity. We take all details off your hands from the beginning to the end.

We furnish the speakers; the inspirational publicity for the press in your locality; the copy for the house organ; and supervise the printing, mailing or distribution of all the literature. All you have to do is to Okay the plan and the copy.

We are now supplying this special service to many clients who are getting results. Why not write or telephone for an interview and see what we can do for you?
